Charles James Fox as a Gambler.
Charles James Fox, the great English orator, enlightened statesman, and reckless man of pleasure, was a most reckless gambler, and spent half his wasted life knee-deep in cards at Brookes' Club. He used to say that the greatest pleasure in existence was winning at hazard, and the next greatest pleasure losing at hazard. Mr. Thackeray says he squandered $1,000,000 at play. Gibbon tells us of Fox once playing for twenty-two hours at a sitting, and losing $2,500 an hour. Unlike tall, thin, ascetic Pitt, who liked his bottle of port but despised "the devil's picture-book," Fox had a broad chest, and was a disorderly lion of a man, capable of vast physical exertion. The fascinations of chance, and the semi-intellectual character of whist and piquet, had won his heart, and his fidelity to the green cloth was unwavering. At those games, into which he could throw his robust mind, Fox was so pre-occupied that it is said he might, if he had restricted himself to them, and avoided the dealers, have drawn a sum of $20,000 a year from his card-purse alone. But at hazard he lost hundreds of money. Of course he won occasionally; once, it is said, $25,000 at a sitting; part of which he instantly paid away to his ravenous creditors. With the money left from these harpies and jackals Fox returned, sat down again at the fatal green cloth, and soon lost his spoils to those from whom he had won it half an hour before. How could such a desperate card at cards, rule a nation, or exert such influence Mr. Pitt, whose whole life was one long, restless fever of ambition? Yet so stalwart was the Titan of Brookes, that he has been known to play, thoughtless, hour after hour, and then stride off to the House to pour forth one of the most servile of his generous speeches.

Dr. Johnson's friend, Topham Beauclerk, left Fox one morning after a long night at the gaming table. Fox was almost mad at his losses; he was miserable, hopeless, and dangerously despondent. Beauclerk, the next day early, went to call on him, feeling alarmed and anxious at his broken spirits; to his surprise he found his burly friend comfortably stretched on a sofa, reading an eulogy of Virgil. "What would you have me do, my dear Topham?" he said, "I've lost my last shilling." Had it not been for his privilege as a member of the House, Fox would have been half his life playing at piquet in prison. So thoughtless and good-humored was Fox, that when his brother's house was on fire he offered to bet the noble owner which beam, which chimney, or which partition would first fall to the ground; a magnanimity so great as that of Sheridan, who, when his theatre was burned down and had his bottle at an adjacent tavern, saying to wonderers: "Mayn't a man take a glass of wine by his own fireside?"

It was to the misdirected affection of his father, Lord Holland (a theorist on education), that Fox owed the first development of his taste for gambling. When only fourteen he went to Spa, where his father allowed the precocious unchecked boy to squander five guineas every night at hazard. On leaving Oxford to make the grand tour, he grew still more reckless about money, and ran into debt at Naples alone to the amount of $80,000 though he was only entitled to $20,000 a year at his father's death. The man never shook off the vice the boy had unhappily acquired. There can be little doubt that Fox's incessant pecuniary difficulties led him into many of those political inconsistencies which his enemies bitterly reproached him.

He was a man of principle. He should have thought only of principle. These difficulties, which were his special snare, were chiefly the result of gambling, and that indolent neglect which blunted his faculties, dulled his ambition, and made his life a wasted one.

We have so many authentic records of Fox's behavior and conversation that we can almost photograph him as he sits at the card-table at Brookes'. "The champion of the people" was heavy and silent till the wine grew low in the bottle. He then woke up to silence the room with the sustained thunder of his Cyclopean laugh. Full of radiant good nature, he thoroughly appreciated the wit of Sheridan and Selwyn; and Sheridan never exerted himself so much as when Fox was present. Burke speaks highly of Fox's lovable ways; and Rogers, who never praised too much, expresses admiration for his fine tact and feeling, his open, gentlemanlike manner, so full of candor and diffidence, and the ardor and interest with which he always plunged into conversation.

Walpole, walking up St. James' street in the June of 1781, saw a cart and porters removing furniture from Fox's lodgings. He had a run of luck, and those carriage-crows, his creditors had gathered thick round the carmen. Half an hour after this, whom should Walpole find sauntering past the same spot but Fox, who came up and talked to him with perfect sangfroid about the Marriage Bill. At this sale of Fox's library, the first volume of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall" was put up and sold for three guineas. It had been presented by the author to Fox, and the English Demosthenes had written on the fly-leaf the following note:

"The author at Brookes' said there was no salvation for the country till six heads of principal persons in the administration were laid on the table. Eleven days later the same gentleman accepted the place of Lord of Trade under those very ministers, and has acted with them ever since."

Lord Tenterden assured the poet Rogers that Fox once played cards with General Fitzpatrick at Brookes' from ten o'clock at night till six o'clock the next afternoon, a water standing by to tell them whose deal it was, that the two combatants were too sleepy to know. Fox once won $50,000, and a bond creditor instantly presented himself and demanded payment. "No," said Fox, "I first discharge my debts of honor."

"Now," said he, "your debt is a debt of honor," and paid the astonished man. Fox used very often, after many hours of play to retain his seat but lay his head on the table, and instantly fall asleep, exhausted in mind and body.

One night at Brookes' Fox quarreled with Adams, whom he had teased about the badness of the government powder. Fox refused to stand sideways, saying, "He was as thick one way as the other." Adams fired, and hit his adversary in the groin, but Fox would not return the shot; as they advanced to shake hands Fox said, "Adams, you'd have killed me if it had not been government powder."

FATHER, COME HOME.
Father, dear father, come home with me, now.
The clock in the steeple strikes one;
You said you were coming right home from the shop.
As soon as your day's work was done.
My good clothes are gone, my pants all worn out.
But BLONDHEIM's got something that's new
O father, dear father, how can I look nice,
Unless I go to BLONDHEIM's with you?

The father could not resist the fervent appeal of his pleading son. A complete outfit attested the depth of his feelings and Blondheim's power to please. Reader go thou and do likewise.

96 S. LINDHEIMER, 96
King street.

The human form is sublime, but even art has made it more attractive, and now, at this season, when the sultry days of summer no longer keep our fair belles within the enclosure of the lattice, they may be seen in pleasant and easy attire gracing our streets. Fashions have become so sensational that no lady of Alexandria ventures into the street unless she has been to LINDHEIMER'S, No. 96, King street, and adorned the fair brow by crowning herself with one of those elegant, rare and rich BONNETS, the very tip of the fashion, and strange how soon a bud, a rose, or a feather may be added to her hair, and she is ready to do so, who do not part with a proud walk of defiance that they are in the fashion, because those who have bought there know that Mrs. LINDHEIMER'S taste is a success to be unrivaled, and she now triumphs over competition by keeping the LADIES' EMPORIUM OF FASHION.

The goods of this establishment are of direct importation, embracing SATINS, SILKS, VELVETS, RIBBONS of all kinds, LACES, Ribbons, Width and Colors.

POINT AND TREAD LACES, CLOTH CLOAKS, LADIES' UNDERGARMENTS, BONNETS, HATS, FLOWERS, STRAW, LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S GLOVES, &c.

In addition to which may be found an extensive stock of DRY GOODS, among which are gay, gaudy and plain Dress Patterns, suited to any taste and age. Do not fear you cannot be suited, for in this establishment is kept every variety of pattern and quantity, to add the most graceful and tasteful grace to any lady seeking the latest styles and fashions. sep 21-2m
